Privacy Apocalypse: 5 Devices You Can't Hide From

I'm going to alert you to what many are considering to be on of the worst doomsday scenarios for free American patriots. One that apparently not many are prepping for, or even seem to care about.

By now everybody knows that the government 'alphabet agencies' including mainly the NSA have been methodically collecting data on us. Everything we do, say, buy and search on the internet will be on permanent data base file by next year. All phone calls now are computer monitored, automatically recorded and stored with certain flag/trigger words (in all languages).

As technology improves, every single phone call will be entirely recorded at meta-data bases in government computer cloud storage, when 'They' finish the huge NSA super spy center in Utah. Which means they will be available anytime authorities want to look them up and personally listen for any information reference to any future investigation. Super computer algorithms will pin point search extrapolations of ANY relationship to the target point.

You can rest uneasily, but assured, that in the very near future when a cop stops you and scans your driver license into his computer, he will know anything even remotely 'suspicious' or 'questionable' about ALL the recent activities and behavior in your life he chooses to focus upon!

This is the 'privacy apocalypse' coming upon us. And you need to know these five devices that you can run to protect your privacy, but you can't hide from.

When Security Overlaps Freedom

The NSA does more spying on 'We the People' than it does on the enemies of the country! Even simple text messages over a certain number of characters will join the wealth of stolen private communications flagged by certain trigger words, in the happy hunting grounds of mega-data heaven.

The two biggest fallacy arguments are that 'those with nothing to 'hide' have nothing to fear', or 'this is the price we pay for living in a fast paced convenient modern computerized world if we want to improve our security and safety'.

Why does all these lame excuses remind me of something the old sage Ben Franklin used to say to slap that kind of thinking? "Those who are willing to give up any freedoms for a little more security deserve neither.'

The factual true reality is that these egregious violations of our privacy rights are premised on the never ending lies of the government. Maybe 'They' still get away with it because for some reason people are so dumbed down or not paying attention, or simply don't know or see the bigger picture.

So assuming that most of us really don't want the government or police to know our most private business just because it's so easy for them to do so even though we are not doing anything wrong, we'll provide a little edification herein about the cold hard realities.

With the increase of technology that we don't even really need for everyday use in most of our lifestyles, the value it does NOT produce in comparison to the dangerous violations of our liberties, exemplifies the true intention of 'the invention'. The government argument for having cameras everywhere in public is that the courts ruled that generally we have no expectation of complete privacy in a public domain.

And of course they took that as a green light to mean that they can now put surveillance cameras literally everywhere in the city and roads and take public pictures of anybody for their meta/data bases. Also, they put face recognition technology in use with the cameras to literally search people's identity and background, at will, anytime when you're in public, $4^{th}/A$ notwithstanding!

In my personal opinion, this is a much better way to replicate the old fashioned Nazi way of saying 'papers, please'.

But our homes are supposed to be insulated and highly protected from what the courts call 'unreasonable search and seizure" which guarantees our inalienable right to privacy in our own homes? There are specific guidelines and nobody is supposed to know what goes on in the sanctity of your castle without your permission or without a court designated warrant, which is issued on the basis of serious probable criminal cause.

But in their anti-privacy compulsion the next inevitable turn in the down spiral of destroying our basic liberties cannot be surprising anymore.

Here's how far and fast the 'tactical tech' invasion of our privacy has slid down the extremely slippery slope of totalitarianism in just the last couple of years:

The 5 Devices that Ruin the Idea of Privacy

1. FLIR Devices (Forward Looking Infrared Devices)

These have actually been around for almost 20 years now in the form of heat seeking devices but the advanced laser electronics and microprocessors now make it into a new and more dangerous tool called thermal imaging detection devices.

Based on (FLIR) the military and civilian search and rescue community immediately recognized the benefits of such devices for aerial environmental tracking search purposes and as the market grew sophistication became enhanced.

The original mechanical concept in application was to pinpoint differential temperature variation between humans and ambient environmental temperatures, in order to determine the potential of locating individual human presence with a color spectrum visual image especially in total darkness by their own body heat.

But rapid developments in the imaging technology and penetration/ranging and portability bring this device to new heights of 'clearly pictured' intrusion.

Deployment is rapidly becoming enhanced, as well, as the science improves more powerful devices with better range and penetration in smaller devices are emerging.

That small neighborhood police 'crime watch drone' will no longer only be able to peek in your window from under your tree branches but will soon be able to see through your walls into the most private places in your home!

A cop can pull up quietly and unnoticed in their unmarked cars or vans— and 'see' through your walls and spy on you right from the curb in front of your house by aiming their new handheld FLIR Thermal Imaging device through walls, and get quite a clear telling image of what you and your husband are doing under the bed sheets or in the personal sanctity of your bathroom.

And if you have a solid concrete home or are down deep in the corner of your basement, there's this next device here in the form of unholy diabolical 'son of FLIR' to eventually find you no matter where you are hiding your home.

2. RANGE-R — Hand Held Obstacle Penetrating Radar

Remember the classic movie series Aliens with Sigourney Weaver where the baby alien monster popped out of the belly of one the space exploration team on the space craft?

And then the aliens were sneaking around the innards of the spacecraft closing in on the Lt. Ripley & Crew and Corporal Hicks pulls out his handheld tracking device—remarkably identical to these RANGE-R devices— and right through the walls and metal bulkheads and pinpointed all the alien monsters sneaking around with their exact location, distance, and movement.

Well the future is here and now. Pretty cool, huh? Well, not if you are a private American citizen trying to appreciate your Constitutional liberties in the enclosed security of your own home expecting that neither the uninvited thief nor the government can invade that privacy.

RANGE-R handheld locating device is based on specially tuned and direction enhanced radar wave technology. This is currently being used by dozens of federal agencies including the U.S. Marshal Service, the BATF and FBI, and even some local municipalities which can afford the purchase of it, usually with their drug seizure profits.

The detecting power of the RANGE-R literally can penetrate many walls to detect humans. This device, along with its bigger two handed more enhanced version—the RADAR VISION 2, which is pressed up against the outside of even a brick wall and is so sensitive and can detect a motionless human's breathing even if they are sitting still— gives the operator a discernable 3D image that can be analyzed for detail at distances over 100 feet!

When USA Today broke the story last month many of us were surprised that the government had already secretly and with a legally questionable application use, deployed these devices in numerous investigations and arrests. Well, you really didn't expect them to publicly announce that they were violating the 4th Amendment, did you?

The official unbelievable excuse this time was that these devices were supposedly used in conjunction with a warrant (sometimes?). The probable cause was that government agents and police needed to know who and what was inside before they entered.

Well, that's a bumpy, but woefully unconvincing convenient slide down the slope from the usual suspects 'public safety' and extreme 'crime prevention'... Just like the use of an officer's sidearm in the killing of unarmed person(s) behaving strangely, if a cop perceives his life is in danger.

3. FADS - Frisk At Distance Scanners

Perhaps this is the most insidiously egregious of this Unholy Technical Trinity so far here because states like New York have been planning to implement this technology in conjunction with their ubiquitous surveillance camera deployment directly against private citizens walking around the city for over a year now. Which means that they are likely now in covert use, possibly even more compact and stealthy, and mounted in discreet police vehicles for routine patrol.

This device replicates the eerily X-Ray eyes type detailed contrast and definition of the walk in TSA devices which were minimalized because of the dangerous radiation output. But they don't really care about 'public safety', at least not at the sacrifice of their obsessive compulsive need to confiscate your firearms.

What, say you? They'll never get all your guns because you carefully conceal them inside your walls in secret hiding places?

Well, sorry to bust your door down but just because these devices can look through your walls, doesn't mean they can't be adjusted to also look INSIDE your walls and plumbing and ducting, and etc.

Check out these more sophisticated mobile privacy intrusion Franken FADS and have your anti-depression meds handy.

4. ZBVs — Z-Backscatting Vans

Just when you thought you were about to wake up with a huge headache from this Orwellian technology nightmare, it gets even worse!

Made by the same company that brought you unhealthy things like the TSA airport body scanners, this is a specialized advanced mobile version which is supposed to be able to frisk people, look inside of vehicles and walls and see everything clearly enough to read label writing or tell how many rounds you have in the gun! It can differentiate between drugs and explosives and who knows what else they are not telling you?

From a liberty and privacy standpoint this is one of the most intrusive devices conceivable. They've sold several hundred of these already and they usually use white Mercedes small cargo vans.

Seems like supposedly greedy entrepreneurs are buying them and 'renting' them out to any police agency for specific times/needs so they don't have to pay out the big bucks to own one.

So if you see one of these white vans with the familiar Mercedes emblem on the grill hanging around you know it ain't a NAAPA auto parts delivery truck. They've been seen several times in New York in the last few months.

What? You say don't care anymore, because you don't HAVE anything in your walls or house or vehicle that you care about them taking? You have anything of real 'value' buried in an underground 'vault' deep enough where even metal detectors can't reach it.

Well, now you're thinking! But 'They' won't be using metal detectors that much for underground search'.

They'll be using this next device if they think you got a little 'Mole' in your blood.

 5. GPR — Ground Penetrating Radar Equipment

This equipment is so 'useful' in various construction and underground search applications from archeology to treasure hunters or construction companies, to homicide detectives that they are now readily available and portable. A single operator can use one and simply walk around and create an 'anomaly' map sort of like sonar but for the ground instead of water, and show an image of an underground cave, sink hole, buried body.

Your stashes of ammo boxes and 'stuff' would stick out like the proverbial horse's ass, even though you buried it and completely covered it with no entrance and planted grass over the top of it!

The really bad part is that the good ones can go down pretty deep, like over 30 or 40 feet or more depending upon strata composite! And don't forget they don't need a warrant to search on public lands, if that's what you are thinking.

There's actually a couple more peripheral tools to help narrow down searches on undeveloped land when GPR equipment is used for people tracking or stash hiding but I think you get the idea now.

How the 4th Amendment Is Thrown Aside

The added bad thing here is all this technology is only what WE know currently but not necessarily what really secretly exists at this point in time and the near future. Radar wave technology combined with computer algorithms have exponentially advanced to a point where even the relatively low tech Russians have supposedly developed radar capability to detect even our newest supposedly radar detection proof F-36 and B plus series stealth fighters and bombers!

So who knows what they'll have by next year to much more easily 'see' everything and anything inside your home in minute detail anytime they feel like it? It may be closer than you think because the military just got the nod to fly two humongous blimps over the Eastern third of the country to 'look for things'. Supposedly for homeland security? What's in that big wallet?

The government agencies have been using these devices for almost a year now with little or no oversight and not many, if any, valid usage based on obtaining the appropriate warrants. This raises serious Constitutional issues.

Under the guidelines of a rogue administration, these alphabet agencies do anything they want and justify their civil rights violations by saying it helps protect their officers when involved in dangerous terrorist hostage situations by knowing how many terrorists are inside the building.

And remember it's not only the Feds who are creating a 'Minority Report' bad movie. Now even local police departments are beginning to use these devices as commonly as they use their flashlights!

The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and offects, against unreasenable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by eath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized.

4th Amendment

The really depressing aspect of all these super intrusion technology is that we have to face the difficult to believe reality that... your personal home privacy is now gone completely, all of it. And it is just a matter of time before it affects everybody, even those nitwits who claim they don't mind because they think they have nothing to hide.

Because someone they might be casually or inadvertently associated with such as a classmate or a neighbor, or some email correspondence that 'They' will be tracking under the presumption of terrorist activity, will also have a 'knock' on their door from the men in helmets, machine guns, jackboots, and body armor after they penetrated and scanned the private interior of your home.

The 4th Amendment is being stomped and thrown aside. By individual states as well like Conneticut and New York with their latest anti-2/A New York Safe Act.

Edward Snowden proved beyond any doubt that they were lying about spying on us but after the initial shock and surprise and outcry, nobody did squat to stop it. Because nobody seemed to care much after Snowden, the government took that to mean 'implied consent' and continued their spying right under our noses without even trying to hide it, or deny it, anymore.

If anyone doesn't understand that we are in the end times of personal privacy then they better wake up fast and smell the coffee you might now be allowed to drink anymore due to the politically correct social engineers who control everything else, decide to ban it for health insurance purposes or some other lie?

What to Do?

Remedies and solutions? I don't know for certain anymore. Some say nothing short of a major revolutionary shift in social consciousness. I'll just add one that should at least be considered because of the immediate impact it would have in our lives. They manipulated the laws to enslave and control us but now we have the dominant balance of power in our Legislative Branch.

All who care enough to preserve the great liberty of privacy, if not for us, for our progeny, should create political momentum to overturn/repeal all unconstitutional laws that have anything to do with limiting our rights to own guns or assets in the absolute protection of privacy. While we still can.

We must ALL unite and proactively charge our new Legislative 'employees' to repeal the insidious laws that are making us all criminals and restore the Constitution to its former uninfringeable status. Otherwise here is my prophecy: if we don't act soon enough the bottom of the slope ride to tyranny will begin to come up quickly and hit us hard with total 'slavery' before we even realize it.

The modern 'Jeffersonian Solution' is to politically unite and 'change it all back' by repealing and dissolving bad laws which enslave good people... before it really is too late.

When you think about the big picture, there's not much you physically have that 'They' can't already take away from you. All we really have left of freedom is our personal privacy and the single remaining right to vote.

What would we have left if they ultimately succeeded in removing all our privacy? Nothing!

The government wants to take all your guns
But they can't get THIS ONE from you!
