

Prep Blog Review: Protect Family and Assets

What would be your biggest fear when disaster strikes, the world as we know it ends and anarchy takes its place? Losing your life, your family and assets, and not being able to protect them? How to prevent this from happening?

Let's find some answer in three useful articles we found for you stumbling upon prepper blogs and websites.

1. Are Your Kids As Prepared As You Are? How to Put Together a School Emergency Kit for Your Child

“As a parent of two small children, my SHTF fears have nothing to do with pandemics, roving hordes of marauders or an EMP taking out my iPhone. My biggest SHTF fear is that “something” could happen while my kids are not with me that could put them into harm's way. I think a lot of parents in the preparedness community share this same fear.

As preppers we diligently prepare for disasters of all sizes by storing supplies, practicing skills and always being aware of our surroundings so that we can be prepared for any potential threats that may come our way...but is a 5, 10 or 15 year old child capable of understanding practical preparedness?”

Read the article here.

2. Hiding Valuables in Your Home

“Looting is a nearly ubiquitous feature of natural and political disasters, and burglary is an everyday risk, especially in metro areas, so protecting your goods is an integral part of your preparedness plan. In this article we’re not talking about hiding things from government agents. Burglars usually have limited time and must operate undetected, which makes it more difficult for them to find your stuff.

Government agents, on the other hand, have unlimited resources, unlimited time, and no liability, so they will simply destroy your home and find everything. Hiding stuff from them requires much more planning, which we will discuss in a future article.”

Read the article here.

3. How to Secure Your Rural Homestead on a Budget

“While living out and away from the hustle and bustle has its definite advantages, it also has some drawbacks that you should consider if you want to maintain the peace and quiet that drew you away from town in the first place.

Although most of the crime reports seem to originate from more populated areas, that doesn’t mean that you should assume it won’t happen to you simply because you live out of the way.”

Read the article here.

Forgotten skills of the Old West

Read NOW

This article has been written by Gabrielle Ray for Survivopedia.