

Prep Blog Review: Survive Every Situation

Knowledge and skills make a BIG difference in a survival situation whether you're in the city or in the wild.

The best way to survive every situation is to stay informed and learn as many skills as possible. It's never too late to start working on your skills.

This week we've gathered 5 articles that will help you prepping for wilderness survival, and also surviving in the city in a disaster situation.

What skills do you find important for survival? Let us know in the comments section below.

1. Best Practices For Dealing With Wounds In A Survival Situation

Best Practices for Dealing with Wounds in a Survival Situation

“Depending upon who you talk to, a severe wound or laceration should always be sutured close. Or should it? When faced with an austere survival situation, the decision you make to close an open wound could spell the difference between proper healing and an infected mess. Personally, I vote for proper healing but getting to the correct decision when under pressure may not be easy. Help is on the way.”

2. Wilderness Survival Skills For Preppers

“When it comes to preparedness there is quite a bit more that goes into it than building a lean to shelter and starting a fire. Everything we do as preppers is geared for not having to revert to these primitive methods. With that being said, if we take these bushcraft (wilderness survival) skills for granted, we are leaving a big hole in our preparedness plans. Not all people that are interested in bushcraft are interested in prepping, but all preppers should be interested in Bushcraft...to some extent.”

3. Learn How To Build A Stealth Shelter

“One of the best ways to get away and be at one with nature is to build a stealth shelter in the forest. Not only are you putting yourself in the most isolated place possible, but you are also aiming to be invisible there. It’s super exciting, and pretty difficult to do this without a little bit a guidance. So here are a few simple tips to make your wilderness getaway one that only you will know about.”
